Dancing With the Stars host Samantha Harris shows the right moves

Hosting Dancing With the Stars would be sweet. You'd get to share your best Buffalo Bills jokes with Emmitt Smith, you'd be well-placed to set Tucker Carlson on fire and you'd be blessed with a lovely view of gyrating ladies. Just ask Samantha Harris.

"I'd never really looked at women's bodies much before doing the show," says the 31-year-old former fitness model. "Now, watching them dance in their sexy costumes, with their ripped bodies, makes me want to hit the gym even harder."

When she's not busy spying ladies on Dancing With the Stars, the Hopkins, MN, native is busy interviewing red-carpet-walking celebrities for the E! network. That means sharing office space with Ryan Seacrest.

"He takes more hours to get dressed and made up than I do," Samantha says. "Ryan spends, like, five hours in hair and makeup, mostly on his hair, and then another hour to pick his outfit."

Samantha, by comparison, looks perfectly comfortable in lingerie.

Last season saw Jerry Rice join the boogie; this season, it's Emmitt Smith. What else can the show do to better appeal to men? Well, we've got hot chicks in hot outfits doing very hot dances. Get a few buddies over, watch Dancing With the Stars and make a drinking game out of it. Maybe chug each time a judge says, "That was disgusting." Watching the show will also help you impress ladies. You'll know how to waltz and understand what a paso doble looks like. That's going to help pick up the chicks. I guarantee you, boys.

We know about the celebrities on the show. What are the pro dancers like? Incredibly intense. They want to win, win, win at all costs, so they drive their partners until they drop. You think an Army drill sergeant is tough. Honestly, these pro dancers would kick anyone's butt. We should send them to Iraq. What does a guy's dance moves say about him?

If you step on the dance floor and look around to see if everyone's watching, it says you have no confidence, you have no game. I'd rather see a guy who goes out and has a great time. If you can make fun of yourself while you're dancing, it shows you know how to be laid-back.

Which celebrities are real douches on the red carpet?

There are so many douche bags. I will say that Chris Klein, right after the whole Katie Holmes debacle, was kind of tacky and really rude. I think he was just overcompensating. Katie running off with Tom was probably not a fun thing to have happen to his ego, but, dude, be a little cooler on the red carpet. Jane Fonda can be a nightmare. She's not friendly and she doesn't have time for anyone, and that's a shame because she's such an iconic, beautiful woman. I was disappointed. What are the rules of engagement for dealing with Ryan Seacrest in the E! offices? Are you, for example, allowed to look him in the eye?

Here's the deal: Ryan is funny, self-deprecating and just a cool guy. You guys are jealous because he looks so good and all the girls want him. But he's gay. No, he's not. And if any of the guys reading FHM had the life of Ryan Seacrest, they would be thanking God every second. He is surrounded by beautiful women.

Women dress in lingerie for themselves

That's infuriating. Let's talk about something uplifting, such as lingerie. I wish I'd wear lingerie more often. The moment I put on sexy lace, I feel so feminine. It makes me feel elegant, but because I'm showing skin, I feel sexy too. Then I want to lounge delicately on a bed or a couch or on a fur-skin rug.

You should wear more lingerie, then. Guys don't care about women in lingerie. You guys look at it for two seconds and then it's gone. You don't care. It's sort of, "Here it is. Let's get naked." Which is why women dress in lingerie more for themselves than for guys.

And what do you like to wear for your own enjoyment?

My style is a little more girl-next-door—I'm from Minnesota. I have a light pink, lace corset that is very beautiful and soft. It's made of really touchable lace and it accentuates all the right things on my body. That makes me feel sexy. FHM
